

CHARLOTTE SCHOOL of LAW

Charlotte Law Review

Articles Submission Policy

The Charlotte Law Review requests that contributors comply with the following standards:

1. Electronic Submission: We strongly encourage contributors to submit their manuscripts through our new electronic submission system available on our Law Review website, preferably in Microsoft Word format. Articles may be submitted to the Charlotte Law Review exclusively or through the standard submission protocol. Alternatively, you may still submit a hard copy if you wish; please address all manuscripts to: Charlotte School of Law, Charlotte Law Review, 1211 East Morehead Street, Charlotte North Carolina, 28204.
2. Length Limitations: In an effort to address the growing length of law review articles, the Charlotte Law Review has adopted a policy limiting the length of articles we will accept or publish.

The Charlotte Law Review will give preference to articles under 25,000 words in length -- the equivalent of 50 law review pages -- including text and footnotes. The Charlotte Law Review will not publish articles exceeding 32,500 words -- the equivalent of 65 law review pages -- except in extraordinary circumstances.

3. Citation Format: Please use footnotes rather than endnotes. Footnotes should conform to the 18th edition of The Bluebook.
4. Expedited Review: If you would like to request an expedited review of your submission and if you have submitted a manuscript, please make the request through our Editor-in-Chief. You may also contact us by phone or email. Please be prepared to provide (1) the manuscript's title; (2) the date by which you need an answer; (3) your phone number; and (4) your email address.
5. Withdrawing Your Submission: Please notify the Articles Editor as soon as possible if you are withdrawing an article.

Review Process

The Charlotte Law Review carefully considers all manuscripts that it receives. We review pieces without regard to the author's name, affiliation, prior publications, or pending publication offers. Our selection process has many steps: at least two editors review every submission, and many pieces go through substantially more stages of review, including an Articles Committee vote, a preemption check, faculty peer review, and a vote by the Editorial Board of the Review. Although we make every effort to honor requests for expedited review, we do not omit any of our review stages in response to such requests. When requesting an expedited review, please understand that our selection process takes time.

Accordingly, if your preference is to publish your manuscript in the Charlotte Law Review, we strongly recommend that you submit the manuscript exclusively, at least 10 days before submitting it to other journals. Authors who choose to give us an exclusive submission should indicate clearly in the cover letter the date that they expect to send the manuscript to other journals. An exclusive submission affects the chances of acceptance only insofar as it gives us the time needed to put the manuscript through all of our review stages.

There is no "best" time to submit a manuscript to the Charlotte Law Review. We will never reject an article for lack of space; rather, we will hold it over for consideration for the next volume.

We also review and periodically publish "Essays." A piece will be considered an essay if it is 25 law review pages or less in length, and its primary purpose is to advance an idea, to summarize a development, or to initiate or engage in discussion. We strongly encourage authors to submit Essays for consideration.

We will notify authors of the decision by email. We normally do not inform authors of the status of their manuscripts other than through email. As a matter of policy, we do not discuss the reasons for our publication decisions.

Thank you for your interest in the Charlotte Law Review.
